Call for entries: Nebraska Press Women 2021 Communications Contest

By Mary Jane Skala, NPW Contest Director

As you begin to think about the holidays also consider entering the Nebraska Press Women 2021 Communications Contest.

All professional communicators are invited to enter, but you must be a 2021 member of NPW to do so. Those who also are National Federation of Press

Women members qualify to have their first-place state entries advance to the national contest.

Eligible work must have been aired, broadcast, posted or printed between January 1 and December 31, 2020. There are contest categories for print writing, photography, editing and design; website content and design; videos; podcasts; books; broadcasting; advertising; and public relations.

Details about the contest, including category descriptions and an entry link, can be found at www.nebraskapresswomen.org under 'contests' (professional contest), or www.nfpw.org/professional-contest. Membership applications and fees also may be submitted through those websites.

The state contest entry site opened October 1. You may start entering at any time, but entries aren't final until you use the "submit" button. The regular entry deadline is noon (central time) January 27, 2021. It's February 3 for books. The final deadline is noon February 10, 2021. Entrants who submit material after January 27 pay an extra, one-time $25 fee. No entries will be accepted after February 10.

Nebraska fees are $15 for the first entry and $7 per entry after that. You may submit up to two entries in each category or subcategory. Note that some categories require more than one example as a full entry, including columns, in-depth reporting, continuing coverage and headline writing, and some also require an accompanying statement.

NPW had 212 entries in the 2020 contest, one of the highest numbers of any NFPW affiliate. Fifteen members had 46 first-place entries advance to the NFPW contest, and nearly all of those entrants earned at least one national award.

For more information, contact NPW Contest Director, Mary Jane Skala at maryjaneskala@gmail.com or 308-293-0982.

Kelly Reece, publisher of Oshkosh Garden Co. News, dies at 61

Garden Co. News Publisher, Kelly Reece died unexpectedly on November 5, 2020, at her home in Oshkosh.

Kelly was born and raised in Oshkosh to a fifth generation Garden County family. While neither she nor her brother Buddy had any newspaper experience, they had dreamed of working at a newspaper before the two of them purchased the Garden Co. News in June 2008, from Jim and Teresa McKeeman. Kelly was publisher, managing editor and co-owner; Buddy is co-editor and co-owner, in addition to a newspaper staff of four. Kelly served on the Garden Co. School Board for 16 years, and was active in the revitalization of the Garden Co. Chamber of Commerce.

She is survived by her husband of 37 years, Rick, daughters Amanda Reece, Katie (Derik) Ashmore, three grandchildren, and her brothers Chris (Dani) Paulsen and Buddy Paulsen.

A private family memorial service will be held Sat., Nov. 14 at 10:30am at St. Mark's Lutheran Church in Oshkosh. Friends are invited to watch the service via Zoom (link will be provided), or live on the Holechek-Bondegard Funeral Home Facebook page. No visitation. Memorials can be made in Kelly's name to the family for later designation (c/o Rick Reece, PO Box 385, Oshkosh, NE 69154).

How to handle superlatives

By John Foust, Raleigh, NC, October 23, 2020

Newscaster Edward R. Murrow once said, "To be persuasive, we must be believable. To be believable, we must be credible. To be credible, we must be truthful." Although he was referring to the reporting of news, the same can be said of advertising.

Claude Hopkins, in his book, Scientific Advertising, wrote, "Superlatives...suggest looseness of expression, a tendency to exaggerate, a carelessness of truth. They lead readers to discount all the statements that you make."

That's a serious condemnation. When an advertiser uses superlatives, consumers are likely to dismiss everything the advertiser says – including statements that may be completely true.

Fortunately, there is a solution. If an advertiser insists on using a superlative, there are four simple ways to make it more acceptable. Just remember the acronym TOTE:

(T) Tone it down: Let's look at a four-letter word which has become one of advertising's most common superlatives – the word "best." Countless ads feature claims of "the best service"...or "the best selection"...or "the best price." All the talk about being "the best" has little impact on consumers. It reminds me of football fans who wag their index fingers and shout, "We're number one," after their team wins a game, even though they're still in last place.

A simple tweak can tone down the claim. Say something like "we're one of the best"...or "we're among the best"...or "we're working to be the best."

(O) Express as an opinion: It's a fact that you are the world's leading expert on what you think. People can disagree with your opinion, but they can't argue with the fact that the opinion belongs to you (or your company). This means that no one can argue with an advertiser who says, "in our opinion, we're the best"...or "we believe we're the best."

(T) Use a customer testimonial: This elevates opinion to another level, because it represents the end user's point of view. When customers say positive things about a product, they can use language that the advertiser would have to avoid (yes, even superlatives). While an advertiser can't convincingly state, "Our car batteries are the best," a satisfied customer can say with all sincerity, "This is the best car battery I've ever used."

Customers' words have a high ranking on the believability scale.

(E) Cite an expert: When an advertiser uses a statement from an expert, the ad automatically has the ring of authenticity. Marketers have used this technique for years, because it's difficult to find fault with someone who is recognized as an authority.

We've all seen headlines that read, "Four out of five dentists recommend..." We've all seen endorsements from researchers. And we've all read statements from people who have tested and compared the performance of various products.

This is a way for an advertiser to say, "We're supposed to like our new widget, so don't take our word for it. Here's what an expert says."

It's all about turning something bad – a superlative – into something that will work.
